Seacroft

80

The Lincolnshire coast is not a naturally associated with links golf in the British Isles and Seacroft, just South of Skegness, is the only one in a 200 miles stretch between the courses of Norfolk and Seaton Carew in the North. Access isn't too easy either, as you have to make your way across the Fens to get here. But if you take the trouble and have the time, you will be rewarded. Running north to south, this is another course like Royal Troon with nine holes out and nine back. Rather than over or through the dunes, here they play alongside them, with a sand ridge dividing the two nines. You are therefore often protected from the worst of the conditions. That said, the wind is never quite as strong as over on the West coast, but on the odd occasion it is it is extremely cold, as it is then blowing straight down from the steppes of Russia. It is a course that dates from the late 1800s, but was only nine holes then. Willie Fernie was Open Champion in 1883 and at the turn of the century he made significant alterations to Seacroft and in the process extended it to 18 holes. Largely speaking this is the course we play today.
